

Neuropsychanalysis: Theoretical and Clinical Lessons

Saturday, March 30 and Sunday, March 31
8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. both days
At CNA conference center, 151 N.
Franklin St., Chicago
Mark Solms, PhD

Neuropsychanalysis starts from the assumption that the brain and mind are the same thing, considered from two different observational perspectives (objective and subjective, respectively). This implies that everything we have learnt about the brain has implications for how we conceive the mind, and vice-versa.

It is not scientifically acceptable to have two different and incompatible theories about the same part of nature. In this workshop, the two perspectives are reconciled with each other, and the practical implications for our clinical work as psychoanalysts and psychotherapists are discussed in detail.

Mark Solms is best known for his discovery of the forebrain mechanisms of dreaming, and his pioneering use of psychoanalytic methods and theories in contemporary neuroscience.
